Model 3 production amid delivery snafu A Tesla spokesperson declined to discuss the delays. A Tesla spokesperson declined to discuss the funding reduction or the recent delivery delays. In recent days, the company has been publicizing its manufacturing process, presumably to reassure investors about its readiness to meet its production schedule of 5,000 cars a week by the end of the year. But there's a catch: An internal email from Tesla CEO Elon Musk to factory workers said the company would have to stop funding Model 3 production -- at least for the next few days -- because the company was having "some issues at the plant" related to the company's flagship vehicle. The email was reported on by Bloomberg, and Musk has since replied to the publication that the internal email was made prior to the recent delays. In a statement to ABC News, Tesla's spokesperson declined to discuss the internal email or any changes made to the manufacturing process, explaining that it's the responsibility of management "to be transparent to the team." "It is normal for a company to have occasional issues at any plant and we always prioritize customer deliveries,
