In the hours before her death, Todd allegedly received a series of harassing phone calls and text messages. According to the Toronto Police and the coroner, Todd's parents initially found the last of these messages when she was still alive. Todd was found hanged by the home's shower head. After her death, her parents stated they found a text message sent by their daughter the day before her death. The message, in which Todd expressed her thoughts about suicide, was later found to have been written by an acquaintance who was sentenced to house arrest after pleading guilty to criminal harassment. Cyberbullying There are varying definitions of cyberbullying, but according to the World Health Organization, a "comprehensive and up-to-date definition of cyberbullying is necessary" for researchers and clinicians. The definition of cyberbullying in the sixth edition of the Diagnostic and Statistical Manual of Mental Disorders (DSM-6) of the American Psychiatric Association states that cyberbullying is "repeated, unwanted, and harmful actions that occur ... over the Internet, in other digital media, or via mobile devices" and are "typically aggressive, offensive, and unprovoked" and that "bullying may take the form of a pattern of deliberate and repeated actions over time." The WHO also defines cyberbullying in terms of "teasing, gossip, threats, hate messages, and humiliating or upsetting content, among others". The WHO suggests that an umbrella term should be used for various forms of cyberbullying such as "cyberaggression, cyberharassment, cyber-bullying and cyberstalking". It is important to note that unlike other forms of bullying, cyberbullying typically targets people without direct physical proximity. Cyberbullying is an under-studied and under-researched phenomenon, and has been shown to be prevalent in schools in developing countries. It can affect anyone from young children to adults. According to the WHO, estimates of the prevalence of cyberbullying are highly variable, ranging from 15% to as much as 90%. However, studies have shown that cyberbullying tends to be a problem for those involved in school activities, especially those who are targeted due to their physical appearance, personality, or sexual orientation. As a result, cyberbullying victims are often marginalized, and the bullies can be just as empowered by being able to bully others at a distance. Researchers at the John Hopkins Center
