Editing text and adding graphics When creating an image, you can edit a variety of elements within the program: type, graphics, and photographic elements. Photoshop makes it easy to edit images, which is why it is so popular. As shown in Figure 15-1, Photoshop offers many tools to work with. To work with the Edit tab or the Crop tab, choose Edit⇒Transform Selection⇒Crop. To work with the Arrange, Filter, Layers, and Adjust tabs, select the Cmd+J/Ctrl+Shift+N (Windows/Mac) keyboard shortcut. If you are a graphic designer or photographer, you most likely use Photoshop to edit your images. It is also the most reliable editing software you can use. Even though Google can make great image editing apps, Adobe Photoshop is still the premiere choice for editing images. One thing you might not know about Photoshop, however, is that it is the most popular vector editing software. All the vector art you see everywhere is created in Photoshop. Vector files are very useful. For example, if you are creating a logo for a company, instead of using a raster file that requires a lot of space, you can use a vector file that requires no space and will look identical in any program. Vector and raster art can also be combined, allowing you to draw something on a raster image, saving your time and creating a unique effect. Some Photoshop vector tutorials are featured below. For more information on Cosbar's array of steel products see the steel section. Steel Upgrades Cosbar can precisely control the temperature of our steel to achieve the optimum product quality. There are several factors that can affect this quality: different manufacturing processes, different heat treatments, and even the temperature of the foundry when casting an ingot. We can control all these factors. We can stabilize or control the heat treatment without affecting the properties of the steel. The benefit of this is that we can accept all incoming orders and get them out for you with the highest quality products. Waffle Cast Cosbar builds its parts using waffle (or wave) technology, which allows for very precise lay-up of the steel. It is very important in this process that the steel is brought to the correct temperature before the part is shaped. Due to this process, you are getting a 100% steel part that will not contain any excess iron in the finished part. Waffle cast parts can be fabricated into stronger parts than any other method used in the foundry industry. It is also a very beautiful process. By controlling the heat of the cylinder, this process allows for producing lower-weight parts than ever before. Cold Rolled If you are looking for a highly precise metal fabrication, then cold rolling is the way to go. Cold rolled steel can be made into thin gauges and thicknesses all while retaining the proper strength for industrial applications. This is extremely beneficial to your product. Cold Rolled parts are also called "cold rolled." The process of using milling equipment to remove metal from the extruded steel is known as cold rolling. Multiple operations can be performed on the raw steel to both increase the strength and reduce the weight of the part. Cold rolled parts are the most expensive to produce and the strongest. A rolled edge is produced at each edge of the part, providing additional strength to that part. Cold rolled edges are the strongest edges in the industry and can be supplied with rolled or glazed surfaces. Cold rolled parts are also highly resistant to corrosion and can be zinc coated. Cold Rolled Parts are one of the strongest methods of fabricating metal, but are also the most expensive to make. Cold rolled parts are produced by breaking the stock flat and passing it through a series of rollers that slowly reduce the thickness of the steel. The rollers first align the flat steel and then progressively stretch it out by multiple impressions

Q: C++ parsing time: Aborting because of unsupported format I'm trying to parse this string: "0.0.476725" I'm using: double d; string str = "0.0.476725"; stringstream s; s.str(str); s >> d; Which as you might expect, fails with: error: basic_string_allocator::substr(): /usr/include/c++/4.4/bits/basic_string.h:245:36: unable to convert from string literal to char* The documentation for stringstream says that substr will not work in this situation. I am unsure of what I should do to read this string properly. As an aside, I don't have a problem reading the string. The problem is that I don't know the format of the string or if there is some sort of documentation for it. It's just a string that I'm trying to parse. A: stringstream is only for reading strings. It may be easier to use std::istringstream s; s.str("0.0.476725"); double d = s.get(); Q: jQuery/JSON/Ajax PHP delete row and get rest of data I am a bit stuck with an application I'm working on.
