The clip, which premiered on Sunday, is no typical Katy Perry offering. It's full of humor, romance, and may be the most honest Katy Perry has looked on the TV screen. It begins with a dream sequence in which Katy Perry is kissing a man, but suddenly wakes up in a bubble bath. She then grabs a towel and a new pair of undies, and puts them on to head out into the sunlight. While she is out, there are a bunch of paparazzi trying to catch her. The video opens up to a full-frontal shot of Katy Perry in the room she is in. She looks serious and contemplative. "I think I should just let you see the rest of me now, I'm just gonna go out, you know?" Katy says. The song is a seemingly autobiographical anthem for gay women. In the final verse, the singer touches on the struggles of being a gay female. "I wonder if she will see, / If she will choose to touch me," Katy sings. "I wonder if she'll do the same / And show me that she's real." Katy Perry has never been afraid to be herself. This song is no exception. The singer is well-known for her gender-bending fashion and for bringing it to a new audience. In this video, she is doing more than just defying gender norms. She is embracing her gender and sexuality. The video could be seen as a coming out to other people, especially gay women. "I think if I was seeing it now, I would definitely be like, 'Oh my god 5b5f913d15
