Theresa May would have to apologise to the EU after she walks out of Brexit talks because it would be illegal, a leading EU lawyer has claimed. European legal expert Professor Tony Scott, from the University of Cambridge, said Theresa May's move to end the talks is "illegal" because the UK would be "in a situation of no-deal" which would breach European law. The claims come after a member of the European Parliament expressed her opposition to Ms May's decision to walk away, saying it would be a "disaster for British and EU citizens." A leading Brexit hardliner, Ms May has turned into a "crusader", says Mr Scott, as she has "deliberately provoked" the EU into suspending negotiations. In an interview with The Independent, he said that although the Prime Minister had the right to pull out of talks if there was no deal to be done, her way of doing this was not legal. "The negotiating position that she has made is legally unacceptable," he said. "The only other possibility is to say, 'there's nothing left to negotiate, we're just going to crash out,' and this is not actually what the legal position is.
