Your chance to see MST3K: Thriller, the after-school special pilot, returns next week. MST3K is a live-action riffing show hosted by Joel Hodgson and his co-stars. They've taken on films from a vast variety of genres, and the show thrives on their zany commentary. Of course, they reach back to the genre itself to add their own take. The pilot for Thriller was posted online earlier this year, and in retrospect, the show's unmistakable style was immediately apparent. The saga itself is no longer animated, but the show still retains the zany humor. Some of the earlier episodes of MST3K are also animated, and there's an overlap in actors between the two shows. There's Joel, Mike, and Frank from MST3K, with Christian Slater in the same roles. Steven Williams also appears in the episode, but as a different character. Like I said, this episode is the pilot for Thriller, and it's called that "Cosmic Monster Clams." Frank and Mike are visiting celebrities who are growing clams in an aquarium. There are slimy pieces of furniture strewn all around the room, and when the visitors' clams refuse to grow, they're each sent a rotten piece of furniture. It's a comedic plot, but the fact that each clamshell is a direct reference to a horror movie is clever. One of the most iconic horror movie titles, with a surprising cross-category predecessor, is 1978's Halloween. The screenplay had no connection with the movie of the same name. In 1978, a spider-like creature called the Terminator was released by the producers of the film, and when it was first seen onscreen, people panicked. It's alleged that the film was directly responsible for the "holiday" known as Halloween. That, however, is a matter of argument that has been kept between the two parties. I have a feeling Joel, Mike, and Frank are just going to hate the movie. It's been a few weeks since this episode was posted online, but I've never heard any more comments about it. Clearly, the good people of YouTube have forgotten all about the show, but if you're interested, there are links below. As long as the show isn't pay
