I'm trying to think of a version control workflow that works for someone who's building software in a language that doesn't have a good version control workflow. My situation: I'm developing software (web application) in Java, but it's not usable as-is to anyone else. For example, the database access code has no authentication or authorization and no error handling. In other words: I need a central repo of my projects and the ability to check out branches of my code to work on different
